Sit

The air was cold and hurt my fingers so we got up walked away

urgent to assimilate life's pinstab pieces into a portrait of what it should be.

Years and mistaken pinnacles later vaguely puzzled with this world's asymmetries
I sit here the same bench same air cupping my cheeks with frozen gloves with a new set of weary eyes wait for another inevitable curveball that I will not see coming I will always be a day late I have always been a dollar short Smack! on the temple.

Where are you now I briefly ask (?) a laundromat The North Pole probably nowhere.
